Graeme has had a nomadic existence; hailing from Durham in the arctic North, he went on to read law at Sheffield Hallam University and completed the Legal Practice Course at Nottingham Law School.

Qualifying in 2007 at a firm in Sheffield, Graeme relocated to London in 2010 to join the Saunders Law Partnership as a duty solicitor.

Specialising in advocacy at the magistrates' court, Graeme has a broad traditional crime practice, with a particular interest in defending against allegations of serious sexual and violent offences. His experience extends to defending large scale prosecution by the Crown Prosecution Service in cases of murder, and both Department for Work and Pensions and Trading Standards prosecutions of fraud.

Graeme has an interest in travelling, literature and language. He also loves all things Scandinavian and is a proficient Swedish speaker. In his spare time, he enjoys watching rugby, sailing, and any other outdoor pursuit he is possibly able to squeeze into his increasingly 'active' schedule.
